Violence continues in Punjab

ISLAMABAD, April 12 (R). — Anti-government violence raged for the fourth consecutive day in Pakistan's main cities today amid speculation that Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto was seeking a compromise with opposition political parties. Police fought street battles with demonstrators in the Punjab capital of Lahore, where two bombs exploded, three banks were burned down and a leading pro-government newspaper's office attacked. In Karachi, police clashed with thousands of demonstrators, some of whom set fire to a hank, liquor store and factory. There were no official reports of casualties but the unofficial total of deaths for the first three days of violence was put at 45.

from Tel Aviv it was announced yesterday that the small but influential Mapam Party decided to remain in the govern-ment alliance with the Labour Party, thus avoiding a split which could have greatly bolstered the rightwing opposition in next month's elections.

Mapam bas long been wary of Defence Minister Shimon Peres, elected last night as leader of the Labour Party. Mapam considered bim to be both a technocrat lacking in ideology and a "hawk" on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

The election of Mr. Peres in succession to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin as Labour's leader brought immediate calls from Mapam ranks for the smaller party to quit the Labour alignment.

But yesterday 58 per cent of the Mapam Central Committee voted to stay in the alliance for the six-month period, to enable the party to reassess its policies after the May 17 ele-

U.S. sends $13m consignment of military aid to help Zaire

WASHINGTON, April 12 (R). -The United States announced today it is sending a new $13 million consignment of mili-tary aid to help Zaire fight invading forces.

But the Americans -- and the Prench -- both made clear today there were limits to their help to Zaire President Mobutu Sese Seko. The State Department said that, although the new aid deal included a C-130 Hercules transport plane, no arms or ammunition are to be sent. A Zaire request for such "lethal" combat supplies had been rejected, the U.S. said.

President Valery Giscard d'Estaing of France went on television in Paris to defend his dispatch of 11 air force planes to help airlift 1,500 Moroccan troops and equipment to Zaire. But the planes would be recalled by the end of this week and "France has no intention of sending forces to take part in a Vietnam-style war," he said. The French president said he had acted to reassure African nations and to meet subversion -- the invaders who entered Zaire's copper-rich Shaba pro-vince from Angola had recent-ly been trained by outsiders in revolutionary war, he said.

But the Kremlin today strongly denied any part in the Zaire crisis, adding a warning to the West and China not to

A catalyst

The designation of Mr. Shimon Peres to lead the Israeli Labour Party into next month's elections is likely to prove a positive development, in the long run, for hopes of working out a peace agreement between the Arabs and the Israelis, for the simple reason that his rigid stand on land and recognition of the PLO will speed up the divergence in American-Israeli interests. This, in turn, will force the Israelis to deal more realistically with the Arabs, and if this Israeli realism is ever to come about, it will do so more quickly with someone like Mr. Peres as the prime minister of

Mr. Peres is of that school of thought that thinks Israel can and should live as something of a self-reliant fortress state, depending on itself for its food, water, energy and military supplies. He argues for reduced Israeli dependence on American aid, and he strikes a sympathetic cord among Israelis because be is the symbol of decisiveness that Mr. Rabin was not. Others in history with the same kind of appeal include Genghis Kahn and George Wallace. Mr. Peres has a general idea of what he seeks for his country, and his ascension to the premiership, a likelihood, will crystallise those forces of rigid territorial Zionism that are a cover-up for the simple underlying fact that the Israelis do not know what they want from the Arabs and how much of the Palestinians' land thev fully covet. Mr. Rabin's problem was that be was never strong enough to bring this matter to a boil, and thus his entire approach to Israel's needs was to stall and put off the day when either the Americans or the Arabs would come to Israel seeking definitive answers to the still unanswered questions of Israel's national objectives and territorial aspirations. Mr. Peres, because he wrongly believes that captured land means security, will only encourage both the Arabs and the Americans to ask these fundamental questions.

There will be a period of probing activity this summer, after which Mr. Peres will have to put his cards on the table. The exercise will bewilder Americans more than anyone else, because it is the Americans more than anyone else who have allowed the Israelis to keep their cards hidden for so long, and with such disastrous results. Once the Americans are totally bewildered by their Israeli friends, the Middle East will be the scene of awesome activity for both peace and war. Mr. Peres is the kind of powerful acerbic catalyst that is required to bring on either peace or war, or possibly both.

ARAB PRESS COMMENTARY

Three Jordanian dailies took up different subjects in their Tuesday editorials. Al Ra'i commented on Yitzhak Rabin's resignation and its possible effect on U.S. Israeli relations. Al Sha'b discussed the situation in south Lebanon and the necessity to implement the Cairo ogreement governing Palestinian-Lebanese relations. Al Dustour commented on the document addressed by the Prophet Mohammad to Heraclius which His Majesty King Hussein presented as a gift to moslems and Arabs.

AL RA'I, said that the recent visit by Rabin to Washington and the latest U.S. declarations on the Middle East have made it clear that differences of opinion exist between them on two issues: First, the Palestinian problem, in particular the establishment of a Palestinian homeland, and second, the nature of an Israeli withdrawal. The U.S. contrary to Israel, is opposed to any Jewisb settlements on occupied Arab lands and will accept only minor chsnges in frontiers in a future peace settlement.

If Mr. Shimon Peres became Israel's prime minister, the paper said, the U.S. would inevitably be faced with a hardening of the Jewish state's posi-tion towards a Middle East peace. Mr. Peres, the paper added, is a well known opponent to any withdrawal from the occupied Arab territories. His election would, for sure, lead to a fundamental change in the Israeli stand.

The paper continued by saying that this will mean the failure of peace efforts or that the Arabs will have to confront America with the alternatives of risking an explosion in the region or threaten American interests. The U.S. is well aware that these alternatives if implemented would endanger the position it has worked hard to reach in the Arab world, the paper conclu-

They should compare their present situation to that of their ancestors to see what they were and what they have become, the paper said. During the prophet's time the Moslems held the reigns and had the initiative to formulate rules to govern international re-lations, ignoring racism and religious discrimination.

At present, the Moslems wa-it for justice to be done to them by others, the paper said, while they have, if they wish. the means to recuperate these rights with dignity. All they have to do, the paper concluded, is to return to His tea-

AL SHA'B considers the application of the Cairo agreement an urgent Lebanese and Arab necessity for the achievement of security and stability throughout Lebanon and to prevent Israeli interventions from affecting Lebanon and the Arabs.

If the Arab citizen sees no acceptable reason for the continuation of the fighting in south Lebanon, the paper added, he cannot also accept and condone the Arabs' total silence over what is bappening there. Well informed sources have said that differences over the application of the Cairo agreement have rekindled fighting in that part of Lebanco. Some parties to the agreement bave retracted their consent after a unanimous agreement had been reached in Cairo, thus exploding the situation in the south erasing a number of villages and putting more than one hundred thousand citizen to flight.

The Treaty of Rome calls for direct elections to the European Parliament, and May or June 1978 has been set as the target date. Up to now the European M.P.s have been picked from the national parliaments, where they have continued to keep their seats - a double job for which they have been lavishly paid, (£25,000 a year, with generous tax concessions and a personal staff, is now being suggested as a suitable emolument for the European M.P.s).

The Treaty of Rome, bowever, calls for direct elections to the European Parliament, and May or June next year has been set as the target date for the first poll of the commuoity'a 180 million electors.

Pending agreement among the oine on a uniform electoral system, each member-country can adopt whatever system it likes for the first election, and the British government's white paper - published, perhaps prophetically, on April Fool's Day! -- sets out these options for the British poll:

And Mr. Twesigye, added: "We thought about our relatives and friends but we felt our silence would no longer change the situation. We hope that other Ugandans will also come out and we will also welcome the support of all friends of Uganda."

In a special sppeal to the Organisation of African Unity, the Human Rights Group said that those countries which quote the clause on non-interference in internal affairs of member states in the OAU charter have no valid point.

Dr. Mugajn said: "African countries were concerned with civil war in Nigeria, Angola and Zaire (Congo). And what is happening in Uganda is very similar to that. But one might countries are not in moral standing because they have already behaved in a similar way of the Liberal Party's commitment to P.R."

But the Tories, understand-ably, want to stick to the pre-sent system, and without Tory support Callaghan will never get his European election bill through Parliament. For on this issue his own Labour Party is hopelessly split, as it has been all along on the whole question of Britain's entry into Europe.

Last year's Labour Party conference voted against the very principle of direct elec-tions to the European Parliament. Strong opposition is also voiced by the Party's National Executive, and Eric Heffer, spokesman for the

The most recent estimate is that the Tories would win 65 of the 81 seats, the Scottish Nationalists 8, Labour 5, Ulster Unionists 3 and Liberals nil. P.R. would give Labour and Liberals a much better deal. Besides, in order to win Liberal support and stay in office Prime Minister Callaghan has

These governments have refrom condemning Amin's atrocities on the grounds that what is happening in Uganda is an internal matter.

Solar powered desalination plant will soon begin operation in Aqaba

By Raml G. Khouri Special to the Jordan Times

Jordan takes a small technological leap forward this sum-mer when the Royal Scientific Society starts operating its experimental solar powered desalination plant in Aqaba.

The small plant, designed and built by the West German company Dornier System, will take in sea water and produce four cubic metres of fresh water per day when it starts operating in July. The size of the plant is purposely small, as the Royal Scientific Society's aim in setting it up now is to

system," and works exactly the reverse of a bome refrige-

The beart of the unit is a five-metre-long, 20-cm-wide aluminium slab along whose underside runs a small pipe. The pipe is filled with pressurised liquid freon gas (the same as in a refrigerator). The slab-and-pipe section is tilted upwards et a 15-degree angle.

The sun's rays strike the surface of the aluminium and heat up the freon gas. The liquid gas turns into a vapour and rises to the top of the unlt, where the sea water is waiting in a tank. The hot gas the sun again to go back up and heat more water. The system is closed, and keeps running as long as the sun is shining.

In a refrigerator, the freon gas takes beat out of the ice-box to leave a cold area. In this desalination system, it takes the sun's beat and transfers it to heat up the sea

According to Mr. Mohammed Bal'awi, head of the solar energy section within the mechanical engineering depart-ment of the RSS and the man in charge of the desalination unit, e solar powered pump refine the Dornier technology and adapt it to local needs, both in Jordan and throughout the Middle East.

This is the site of the desalination plant about 6 kms. from Agaba. It is presently under construction.

The system itself is only designed for an optimum, eco-nomical output of some 24 cubic metres per day, and is intended to serve small communities along the seaside or inland near sources of brackish (salty) water.

The Saudi Arabian Coast Guard has already expressed an interest in having the RSS adapt the system for their use, and it is also practical for such isolated communities as mineral exploration teams, coastal research groups or small seaside military outposts.

The system, remarkably simple, called a "solar beat pipe transfers its beat to the water tank, where the sea water is heated and reaches a temperature of more than 80 degrees Centigrade.

At that temperature, the water vaporises. The water vaporises and runs up against a cooler condensing surface, where it is condensed back into liquid water. The end product is fresh water, which then runs off via a channel to be stored in a collection tank.

It then bas to be "blended" with some mineral salts to make it drinking water.

The freon gas that is initially heated by the sun to heat the salt water turns back into its liquid form, falls back down to the bottom of the alumi-will also be installed next year to draw sea water into the unit (the pump would be run by a turbine that is powered by the solar heated freon gas). Windmills may also be in-contained desalination plant in nium pipe, and is heated by

Mr. Bal'awi also explains that 350 measuring points have been built into the project to collect data on temperature, water salinity, flow rates, pressure, solar radiation, humidity, and winds. The data will be fed into a small computer on the site, where the RSS will eventually have four resident engineers on duty to tabulate the results and keep a constant watch on the efficiency of the system.

Mr. Bal'awi also explains that the aim of the RSS in set-perimental solar power research project underway, though it is not so romantically located. Housed on the roof of the RSS mechanical engineering department in Amman are two solar powered bome water heaters.

These small units take in water at an average tempera-ture of 20 degrees Centigrade, simply pass it through pipes that are connected to alumi-

The Aqaba solar powered desalination plant has been set up under a peculiar contractual agreement between the RSS and the West German Agency for Technical Cooperation. The for Technical Cooperation. The RSS has paid the JD 80,000 cost of the buildings for the desalination scheme, while the German government has put up the approximately JD 120,000 for the equipment and person-nel costs for three years.

According to the contract signed between the RSS and the German agency, the RSS will run the project for three years, after which it is to submit a final report on the commercial production feasibility of the system.

If the system is then to be manufactured and sold to Arab governments, the RSS would have the right to do this, while Dornier System would provide units for other customers throughout the world.

Mr. Bal'awi says the potential of solar power is tremen-dous, and includes using it for heating and cooling buildings, power generation, pumping and desalination.
The RSS already has plans to start research into generating electricity by using solar beat, as well as to use the sun's plentiful energy bere in Jordan to beat buildings in winter and cool them in sum-

The Director of the RSS mechanical engineering depart-ment, Dr. Mahmoud S. Audi, explains that Aqaba is located in the second bottest region of the globe. Solar powered energy research that is perfected in Jordan, be says, can be trans-ferred virtually intact for use throughout the Gulf region. where climatic and solar conditions are similar.

Dr. Audi also explains that the idea behind carrying out this kind of research in solar energy or other fields is to take technology that has been developed elsewhere and adapt it for use in the Middle East.

'We're not so interested in inventing things," he says. "The transfer of technology is our major objective, or what we call edaptation by modification. Our aim is to refine this kind of soler power system so that it is applicable for use throughout the Middle East, and we're just at the beginning of the road in this field."

There are some hopes that the solar energy section of the RSS can develop into a regional Arab research centre. Arab governments have already given substantial financial assistance to the RSS, and the fruits of research at the RS: are starting to filter out to other Arab states. Dr. Audi himself has recently made a tour of some Arab countries to give them technical advice on their own solar energy research programmes.

Dr. Mahmoud S. Audi uses a diagram of one of the modules at the Agaba desalination plant to explain how the system works. (Photos by Rami G. Khouri).

Oil wildcatters take rigs wherever they can make a profitable strike

Mr. Bal'awi stands next to the solar powered home water heaters being tested on the roof of the RSS mechanical engineering building in Amman. Water from the top tank goes into pipes that run up the length of the three collecting panels, and is stored in the bottom tank at a temperature of about 60 degrees centigrade:

Mr. Martin, president of Martin Exploration Company, is a "wildcatter." As such, be is one of some 10,000 people who independently scan charts and try to find oil and gas with the limited resources they can marshal from small investors. His drilling costs, which will run $50 million this year, are small compared to the billions spent by the industry

However, as an oil producer, he is not immune to federal, state, and local regulations, and the volumes of rules which emanate from the regulatory agencies are Mr. Martin's largest complaint.

"Our biggest problem," be states, "is that we don't know the rules and don't have time to learn them." He further explains that he and the three other entrepreneurs who make up Martin Exploration can't keep up with rules published by the Federal Energy Administration, Federal Power Com-mission, and Environmental Protection Agency.

He adds, "with all the noise coming out of Washington, it's impossible to predict what the price of natural gas will be." Since Mr. Martin buys shortterm leases of three years or less, it is difficult to know if e well is going to be commercially successful even if it finds oil and gas. "Right now," he tells a visitor, "I'm buying interstate basis." Currently the price of natural gas is frozen at $1.44 per mef, although it is up to $2 per mcf within Louisiana. President Carter has indicated he wants to decontrol gradually the price of gas at the well-Meanwhile, men like Mr.

Martin scour maps and charts looking for auitable places to plunk down drilling rigs. Since most of Mr. Martin's wildcat sites are in the swamps, he brings the drilling rigs in by barge. And, since he usually tries to find oil and gas around the periphery of big fields depleted by the major oil companies, he has a good track re-

However, in Louisiana, there are not a lot of intrastate gas pipelines -- those that transport oil or gas only within the state. There are a lot of interstate pipelines which ship the oil and gas north.

In one recent gas find, Mr. Martin explains, it would have cost an additional $25 million to transport the gas to a pipe-line which ships it only to Louisiana customers. Instead, at a fraction of the cost, he hooks up to a pipeline which transports the gas to northern customars.

Since expenses eat up capital quickly, Mr. Martin keeps a tight hand on his drilling programme's costs. A typical well costs $700,000 - $800,000 to drill and get into productoo expensive for the small wildcatters. A major expense is the cost april 1 of rights from the owner of the land where the well is to be drilled. The landowner usually receives $75-$100 per acre plus 25 per cent of the revenue from any oil found.

An operator must have a record of success to attract new investors. Quips Mr. Martin, "an investor only remembers your last drilling deal, so the last one better be successful."
To date, Mr. Martin has struck pay dirt more often than not. According to a prelimina-ry prospectus for a new dril-ling programme (underwritten by Merrill Lynch), Mr. Martin has found oil of gas in 38 out of 55 boles he has sunk. For the average investor in his 1973 - 74 programme, the net return on investment for the life of the oil and gas field will be 235 per cent, excluding income taxes and depletion allowance deductions.

Even more spectacular was his 1976 drilling programme, which an engineering report estimated could return up to 600 per cent of the initial in-

However, these returns are the exception, not the rule. The number of oil and gas wildcatters has dwindled, says Wayne Blankenship, an associate of Mr. Martin's. There are only about 10,000 wildcat-ters left. There used to be more than 20,000.

The possibility that the sud-den growth of the Antarctic ice sheet may trigger an ice age has been given new weight by recent evidence which matches small changes in the wobble, tilt, and orbit of the earth with the ebb and flow of past climates.

Until recently this astronomical theory for climate change had been dismissed because it can account for only a onedegree difference in the global temperature average. The variation between an ice age and interglacial is closer to 5 deg-servatory, and Nicholas J. Shackleton of Cambridge University in England reveals an unmistakable correlation between climate changes for the past 150,000 years and astronomical cycles.

As a result climatologists are being forced to consider various ways that small variations in sunlight might cause benign interglacials or harsh ice ages. A prime suspect is the fluctuation of the Antarctic ice sheet.

"Earth's climate system must somehow amplify these small effects," Dr. imbrie mused during a telephone interview. 'The Antarctic ice sheets may very well be the amplifier. They may be the reason the climate is so sensitive."

The basic reasoning is as follows. In some as yet un-known way a slight dimming of the rate the sun's heat reaches the earth's surface causes the Antarctic ice sheet to begin growing rapidly. Then this increasing ice cover acts like a vast radiator. It beams heat into outer space more effectively than did the sea it

This, in turn, alters the glo-bal weather patterns and so touches off glacial growth in the Northern Hemisphere. Thus the world might plunge into another 90,000 odd years of ice

The astronomical theory pre-dicts that the natural trend for the next 23,000 years is growing glaciation. In the last 8,000 years the sub-Antarctic seas have been cooling steadily, scientific studies have found. Already the water here is halfway to its ice-age tempera-

Although scientists measure of years, the evidence suggests that dramatic climate changes occur within a century or two. According to Terry Hughes, glaciologist from the University of Maine, this is another reason to look to ice sheets as the instrument for climate

Unlike changes in earth's orbit -- which occur gradually over thousands of years -- gla-ciers can change their rate of growth or contraction quite suddenly. From a growth rate of e few metres a year glaciers have been known to suddenly start growing at kilometres per year and then to begin to retreat just as unpredictably.

This is Dr. Hughes' fifth season in Antarctica. He has come to study the complicated dynamics of the last remaining giant ice sheets. Already he thinks be may understand how an ice age ends abruptly. This involves giant ice shelves like the one covering Ross Sea. From work that his colleague, George Denton, has done, Dr. Hughes feels sure that similar ice shelves covered much of the Arctic and North Atlantic during the last age.

These shelves seem to act like corks, keeping the tremendous ice sheets from melting. But under certain circumstances, he believes, "calving bays" would form. These are places in ice shelves where the glacier lce is broken up into armadas icebergs.

"Hudson's Bay was once a large calving bay," says Dr.

Hughes.
And, he continues, some evidence suggests that the Ross Ice Shelf itself might be developing a calving bay. There is an indication that the point where the shelf is grounded is retreating: One of the neces-

If this were indeed happening, then the scientist has cal-culated that the ice sheet in western Antarctica extending from the Palmer Peninsula to the Trans-Antarctic Mountains would disintegrate in about 300 years. Besides raising the world sea level by 20 feet, no one seems to know what effect this would have on the world However, scientists here believe that the ice shelf is thickening, not deteriorating, ex-plains Richard Cameron, the National Science Foundation manager of the various Ross Ice Shelf investigations, during a discussion at a small camp located on top of the los shelf. At this spot engineers from the Cold Regions Research and Engineering Laboratory have been trying to punch a hole completely through the 1,300-foot thick ice. Although they have been forced to give up the attempt this season, the scientists involved say that when the hole is completed, it will help them determine why-

ther the ice shelf is growing

Even if this is not the trigger for climate change, it may be a sensitive indicator of the direction things are heading," says Dr. Cameron.

This could be especially important if any of man's activities - burning fossil fuels, spraying large amounts of aerosols into the atmosphere, cutting down forests -- are found to have significant climatic effects, the Antarctic

France to go ahead with nuclear policy despite Carter's wishes

PARIS, April 12 (R). - France will tell a conference of nuclear powers meeting in London later this month that it will go ahead with its advanced nuclear technology policy, French officials said today.

The conference, known as the London Nuclear Club, including the United States and the Soviet Union, is due to meet on April 28 and 29 to discuss President Carter's decision to slow down the develop-ment of U.S. fast-breeder reactors and nuclear fuel reprocessing programmes.

Mr. Carter said he hoped that Britain, France, West Ger-many and other countries capable of producing plutonium

But President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's government bas also pledged that no further exports of reprocessing centres would be permitted.

Israeli seamen begin strike

TEL AVIV, April 12 (R). - The Israell Merchant Seamen's Union today began an indefinite strike in support of bigher wages.

The union said it took the step, which was not authorised by the Histadrut trade union federation, because of the higher salary scales promised merchant marine officers, who have been on a partial strike for about a week.

The seamen got a 20 per cent wage hike in January but said the proposal made to the officers exceeded 30 per cent.

The union say they have informed Israeli shops abroad of the strike, but the shipment of citrus was not immediately affected since the growers are using mainly foreign ships.

ECONOMIC NEWS BRIEFS

* LONDON, April 12 (AFP). — Heathrow Airport, serving London, was threatened with paralysis when shop stewards of British Airways voted today to have all maintenance workers strike. The airport already has been hadly disorganised for 10 days by a strike of night maintenance men. The decision to extend the work stoppage 10 day maintenance staff was made to protest against the discharge of 1,250 night staff on Thursday. Shop stewards voted 175 to five in favour of a total maintenance strike. The vote has to be ratified by a general meeting of workers later in the day.

* RIYADH, April 12 (R). - Prince Turki Ibn Abdul Aziz, Deputy Minister of Aviation and Defence, opened Sunday a new airport near Al Jouf, near the Jordanian and Iraqi borders, the official Saudi Press Agency reported. It cost 92 million riyals ($26 million) to build.

* SUVA, Fiji, April 12 (R). — Developing countries from Africa, the Caribbean and the Pacific (ACP) asked the European Common Market here today for firm decisions about trade between them. The request was made at a meeting between Fijian Prime Minister Ratu Sir Kamisese Mara, president of the ACP Council of Ministers, and Britain's Secretary of State for Trade, Mr. Edmund Dell, president of the EEC Council of Ministers. The meeting followed strong criticism of the EEC yesterday by Mr. Ratu Mara, who said the Common Market had adopted an ungenerous and unvielding attitude to Third World exports.

* RIYADH, April 12 (R). - Saudi Arabia will advance Indonesia

a $50 million loan for road building projects, a top Central Bank official said here yesterday. Dr. Mahssoun Jalal, Vice President of the Saudi Arabian Monetary Agency (SAMA), told newsmen after meeting an Indonesian delegation that the aid agreement will be signed at the end of May. * NEW DELHI, April 12 (AFP). — The Indian parliament has approved the plan for a state takeover of the Caltex installations and distribution network. The government reached an agreement with the U.S. oil group on Dec. 30 under which the Indian state will pay $130 million compensation.
